Equipment for a Twin Costs $113

It cost $113 per man for what the well-dressed major league baseball player will wear this year. The figure comes from Ray Crump, Twins' equipment manager.

"The ball club pays about $60 of it for each man," Crump said. "The club furnishes uniform, cap, helmet and socks. For the catcher, it furnishes shin guards, mask and chest protector."

Each player has three sets of home whites and three sets of road grays. Players must buy their own gloves. Fielder's gloves cost about $22 wholesale. The catcher's mitt costs $26. Players also buy their own shoes at $19 a pair. They need at least two pairs a season.

The ball club pays $19 a dozen for baseballs and uses 200 dozen in spring training. Most clubs use about 900 dozen in a year. The ball club also buys all the bats.

Norman Hopes for Coach, Manager Job

Bill Norman, special assignment scout for the White Sox, is still hopeful of returning to a field position—coach or manager—in the majors.

Norman is a former St. Paul outfielder. He played Charleston in the American Association and worked at Detroit in 1955 and 1959.
