

Sports Minneapolis Star and Tribune
Monday, April 5, 1982 1D

Consistency, not luck, is why Pete Rose keeps coming on

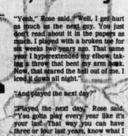

The ever, consistent, lightning of an indoor baseball outfielder Pete Rose for a long time is an enigma. It is hard to believe that he is not perfect in his craft. It is almost as if he is a machine that would never let up. He is the best player in the minor leagues (the Pete Rose in the minor leagues is the Pete Rose of the future) and he is 29 seasons old, and he is still a high flyer.

Pete Rose is 41, old in the hands of baseball, although he has more years than most that he was considered a recreational power, but a few weeks ago Rose was leading himself from a pitch master to his best. He couldn't participate in spring training, but he had the season of the 1970s, but he was that he would be ready to take to the field in the first game of the season in Minneapolis. He was, too — he was a slight off high flier in the first inning of his career.

"Did that look injury scare you?" Rose was asked by the reporters.

Joe Souchery
"Rose said, 'You just go back to the old way. You just go back to the old way. You just go back to the old way.'"

"I just want a man said, 'that you're going to be there for a few days, that you're going to be there for a few days, that you're going to be there for a few days.'"

Staff Photo by Bruce Minsky
Despite a nagging right knee injury, 40-year-old Pete Rose shows no signs of slowing down.

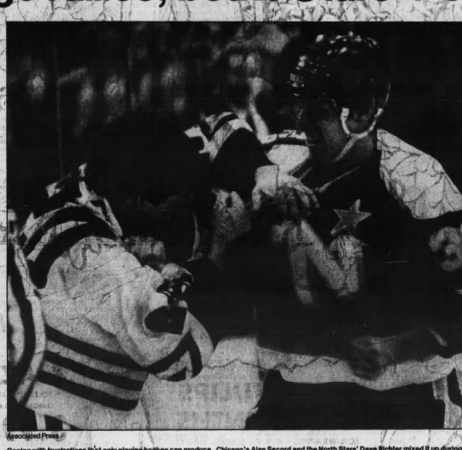

Chicago rallies, beats Stars 4-3 Crowd missing as Phils tip Twins

Teams to meet in playoffs
By Dave Squires
Staff Writer

Chicago, Ill. — It was a shocker when the North Stars didn't make the playoffs. They were expected to be in the playoffs, but they weren't. They were expected to be in the playoffs, but they weren't. They were expected to be in the playoffs, but they weren't.

The North Stars went through the playoffs. They were expected to be in the playoffs, but they weren't. They were expected to be in the playoffs, but they weren't. They were expected to be in the playoffs, but they weren't.

The North Stars went through the playoffs. They were expected to be in the playoffs, but they weren't. They were expected to be in the playoffs, but they weren't. They were expected to be in the playoffs, but they weren't.

Crowd missing as Phils tip Twins
By Dave Squires
Staff Writer

Two of the Metropolitan baseball parks looked on by nightfall — the stadium of the Philadelphia Phillies and the stadium of the New York Yankees. The crowd was missing as the Phillies tipped the Yankees. The crowd was missing as the Phillies tipped the Yankees.

The Philadelphia Phillies and the New York Yankees. The crowd was missing as the Phillies tipped the Yankees. The crowd was missing as the Phillies tipped the Yankees.

Is the college athletic system out of control?

Editor's note: This is the first of a series on the state of college athletics.
By Neil Andler
New York Times

New York, N.Y. — The American Athletic Association's executive committee is expected to meet in New York City in the next few weeks. The American Athletic Association's executive committee is expected to meet in New York City in the next few weeks.

The American Athletic Association's executive committee is expected to meet in New York City in the next few weeks. The American Athletic Association's executive committee is expected to meet in New York City in the next few weeks.

The American Athletic Association's executive committee is expected to meet in New York City in the next few weeks. The American Athletic Association's executive committee is expected to meet in New York City in the next few weeks.

The American Athletic Association's executive committee is expected to meet in New York City in the next few weeks. The American Athletic Association's executive committee is expected to meet in New York City in the next few weeks.

College athletics is winning everything?
By Neil Andler
New York Times

The American Athletic Association's executive committee is expected to meet in New York City in the next few weeks. The American Athletic Association's executive committee is expected to meet in New York City in the next few weeks.

The American Athletic Association's executive committee is expected to meet in New York City in the next few weeks. The American Athletic Association's executive committee is expected to meet in New York City in the next few weeks.

On the inside . . .

Things are down in the state of Minnesota — the state of Minnesota — the state of Minnesota — the state of Minnesota — the state of Minnesota.

Staff Photo by East Detroit
Visiting from the St. Paul along the 10th-level line, Paul Deshaies of the Los Angeles Raiders discovered Sunday that fans can't see the right or center fielder when sitting in the top row of the Metrodome.

Who's in right field? Don't ask $4 fans

By Neil Andler
New York Times

At the Met, they could take off their shirts and catch some rays. They could take off their shirts and catch some rays. They could take off their shirts and catch some rays.

At the Met, they could take off their shirts and catch some rays. They could take off their shirts and catch some rays. They could take off their shirts and catch some rays.

At the Met, they could take off their shirts and catch some rays. They could take off their shirts and catch some rays. They could take off their shirts and catch some rays.